

2015-2016 ANNUAL REPORT

CASB MEMBERS MADE TOUGH DECISIONS AND INNOVATED DURING DIFFICULT FINANCIAL TIMES.

An annual report marks the time when an organization takes stock of itself and how it performed over the course of a year. Because the Colorado Association of School Boards is a membership organization – more than 900 school board members representing most of the districts in the state – we take stock of CASB's work and the work and health of member school boards.

CASB and local school boards faced challenges in 2015-16 but, overall, successfully took on those challenges.

With a few strokes of a pen in 2009, funding for Colorado's schools changed dramatically, starting on a downward spiral that now totals $830 million in lost funding each year. No organization, no group of people, could withstand such a financial hit without hard work, strength of purpose, a sharing attitude and good communication. Each and every school board has shown those characteristics in abundance.

Almost every board has made tough budget decisions; many also responded in innovative ways, doing such things as combining staff positions and using blended learning and online tools to ensure students have what they need to achieve.

Making hard choices is part of the job. However, successful boards also learn from one another, connect with one another and share solutions and ideas. Part of CASB's role is to create opportunities for that learning and camaraderie to flourish. Indeed, over the years we have heard from boards that have left and later returned to CASB that the ingredient they missed most was being part of the broader school board community.

This past year, CASB brought members together in many venues, including Days at the Capitol, regional meetings, conferences and our 75th Annual Convention. These gatherings foster a sense of unity and purpose for members, which in turn provides guidance and inspiration for the CASB staff. History has shown that school boards are successful when they work together, and thus it is worth remembering Abraham Lincoln's famous caution: "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

While boards showed resilience in dealing with lean budgets, CASB was concentrating on the sources of those budget woes – the state's conflicting constitutional amendments. Without a break in this logjam, there is no possibility funding will match the needs, never mind the dreams, of the K-12 community.

CASB participated in an effort known as Building a Better Colorado. This bipartisan initiative, spearheaded by former University of Denver Chancellor Dan Ritchie, featured statewide meetings to gather opinions on the financial health of the state and proposed budgetary fixes. As a result, voters will decide this fall whether to give the state some relief from constitutional budget restrictions.

A second, related effort by CASB is to develop an online interactive tool that will help board members explain the state budget and restrictions on it. Members have asked for tools that will help them discuss this topic with parents, business leaders and other community members, and we'll share a tool this summer.

On the national level, Congress finally reauthorized the No Child Left Behind Act by passing the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA). CASB and the National School Boards Association worked to ensure that language strengthening the role of local school boards remained in the final bill.

Of course, all of the work CASB staff does for and with its members continued this past year. The policy department helped members keep up with legal requirements that affect board policy and worked with many individual districts; the legal department continued its outstanding support for all members; "Road Warrior" Randy Black and other staff were all over the state supporting the work of local boards; and the advocacy and legal teams did yeoman's work in the legislature and at the Colorado Department of Education to protect K-12 interests.

Meanwhile, CASB has not neglected the future. We have used social media, especially Facebook and Twitter, to keep members informed about important policy, legislative and local developments. Next year, we plan to roll out options for online learning.

As we look to an uncertain future, we are happy to have your board standing with CASB and all other local school boards across Colorado. Thank you.
